

DECLARES NOVELIST THREATENED TO 'RIP HIDE OFF CORRIGAN'

Counsel for Magistrate, at Trial of Libel Suit, Calls Howard Drug Addict.

Before a jury in Justice Goff's part of the Supreme Court to-day counsel for Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan declared that George Bronson Howard, author and playwright, was a drug addict and that while under influence of drugs often threatened to write a book that would "take the hide off Corrigan." The charge was made by Harry W. Arnold, attorney for Magistrate Corrigan in his $200,000 libel suit against the Hobbs-Merrill Publishing Co., of Indianapolis, for an alleged libelous allusion to the magistrate in Howard's novel "God's Man."

The courtroom was filled with many prominent witnesses including Dean George T. Kitchway of Columbia Law School, Judge Franklin C. Hoyt of the Children's Court and Magistrate Peter T. Barrow. Howard was not present. He was said to be in Los Angeles trying to regain his health. The suit against him was not pressed.

Mr. Arnold laid stress upon the fact that one chapter of the novel was titled "Justice is a Corrigan." In the body of the story the name was spelled "Corrigan," but in the table of contents it appeared as "Corigan." "This change in spelling," the lawyer declared, "shows that Howard, who had frequently threatened to write up Judge Corrigan, while under the influence of drugs, was making doubly sure that no one would mistake the person he referred to. 'We will show,' the lawyer continued, 'that Howard had been arrested and arraigned before Magistrate Corrigan and that in the novel he was merely trying to vent his spleen on a judge who found it necessary to hold him for a higher court on a charge of having attacked Miss Theodora Gerard with a deadly weapon in his effort to take a $250 diamond ring and pearl necklace from her.'

"We propose to show further that under the influence of drugs Howard suggested about what he would do to Justice Corrigan and never would be molested since the magistrate was afraid to sue."

Many excerpts from the novel were read.

"In one place," the lawyer said, showing the book to the jury, "this man Howard referred to Magistrate Corrigan as a bearded man whose picture was published in the papers when they couldn't find a photograph of an educated ape."

Counsel for the publishers, John L. Lockwood, stated that his client had acted in good faith and, upon learning that Magistrate Corrigan objected to the book, ordered its recall.

J. S. HALL LEFT $1,000,000

Bank of Stock Exchange Member's Estate Goes to Widow.

The will of Jacques S. Hall, Stock Exchange member, who died two weeks ago, was filed to-day.

The bulk of his estate, valued at more than $1,000,000, goes to his widow, Hatie S. Hall, of No. 32 West Fifty-fourth Street. Requests ranging from $1,000 to $2,500 are left to various Hebrew charities, and a son, Stanley J. Hall, gets $300,000 outright.
